A Bad Man's Luck

Scott, of Ventura - 'Orat On Scott"-is

Joe Dye was the bad man, the gun-fight er of that part of the country, and had a record of three or four potches on the butt of his handy six-shooter. Joe was a tall, handsome, picturesque obsp. pleasant enough to meet under ordinary circomstances, but his temper and his trigger finger worked too harmonicusly to make him an altogether master of Santa Pauls, and he concluded that the efficial was not the proper sort of person to have running around loose. So be said he was going to shoot the postmaster ping into a store one afternoon, he saw Joe

It is not a good scheme for a man to pack a gun unless he packs a little common sense and presence of mind with it. The postmaster forget to put a cartridge into the barrel of his rifle, and when he pulled the trig-ger nothing happened. Something happened immediately afterward, however. Dye pulled his gun and shot a lot of boies in the postmaster. Of course, Joe was acquitted on the plea of self-defense.

Old man Udeil has walked the streets of Santa Paula with his beart in his mouth for more than two years. He had a ranch adjoining Joe Dye's place in the hills, and one Sunday Joe made a neighborly call on him Joe's dog was there, too, and immediately picked a row with Udell's dog. Udell tried to stop the fight, but Joe said, "Let'em have it out. They'll fight every time they meet if they don't set le it now." So the dogs had it out, and Joe's dog got beautifully licked. This made Joe fearfully angry. He went home after his gun, came back and shot Udell's dog and talked about shooting Udell also. The old man fled to town and never went back to the rench until he heard that

Joe Dye was dead.
Joe Dye was killed a few weeks ago in Los Angeles. He had threatened a man, who didn't want to be shot, and the man who didn't want to be shot bought a shotgun and resolved to give Joe a dose of Picche is Ploche fair play. It got its name from the Nevada mining camp, where it was prac-ticed by the gun-fighters of early days with great success

The man who didn't want to be shot located bimself in a second-story window, on a street through which Joe was sure to rase. and when Joe showed up within easy buckshot range, he called out to him, "Hello

Joe looked up, reached for his gun, and tumbled over with so many holes in him ry ticket.

But about Soutt, of Ventura. Scott and Joe had a legal contest over an oil claim and Scott being a discreet man, dodged that as a subject of conversation whenever he met Jos. One day they met in a saloon and drank and chatted amiobly at a table. Joe led the talk around to the oil claim, and made some assertion about the records that Scott thought was inaccurate.

anybody else on earth. Without stopping to think or meaning to start a row, he popped out: "Joe, you are a blank-dashed liar." "Before I could wink Joe had his gun out and poked under my nose. Scared? Well I should say I was. But I was to quick for him, I took it all back before he could shoot." - San Francisco Examiner.
